GLASS OF SALTS CLEANS KIDNEYS

If your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you, drink lots of water.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowls clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates the body to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad-Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice combined with citric, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad-Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

UNIVERSITIES OF JAPAN ARE FOR PREPAREDNESS

College Students to Receive Military Education; European War Observed as Object Lesson.

(Associated Press Correspondence.)
Tokio, Jan. 25.—The American university project of inaugurating some form of military education and training among college students was actually incorporated in Japanese universities this month. The idea originated with Baron Keijiro Yamagawa, president of the Imperial university, who enlisted the co-operation of his professors in a move to teach military technicalities and military training to students so that in case of war a large number of young men would be available as junior officers.

Japan is a country of great military strength with a great army commanded by a system of conscription but the present war has impressed itself upon the minds of the leaders of Japanese life that every possible means of developing the nation's preparedness is being studied and, when found feasible, followed.

The teaching of college students in the business of war is the contribution of the educators of the empire to the new policy of expanding national preparedness. The idea has sprung partly from the difficulty in finding sufficient officers alleged to have been experienced in Europe and the entrance into the great conflict of unprecedentedly large numbers of soldiers, many of them having little special military education.

Compulsory Service.

The law of Japan requires all able-bodied Japanese male persons of from 17 to 40 years of age to serve in the army. In practice, however, this law is not strictly followed. The service is divided into active, reserve and depot and extends sixteen years and four months. The two-year service for infantry was adopted in 1897. An important qualification in the law is that young men studying at schools, either governmental or private or a state grade school or universities may postpone their enrollment until the same temporary exemption applies to students who go to the United States or Europe to pursue their education. They may remain abroad until the age limit is passed the year entirely exempted. The education of home students exempted, they are expected to serve in the army one year, after which they are enrolled in the reserve service with the rank of non-commissioned officers.

Military drill is common to all the schools of Japan, but it does not go far enough in the opinion of the university professors who seek to turn out college graduates who could at once take up the duties of officers. Their idea is that if Japan is to maintain her exalted position among the world powers and be certain of her everlasting independence, the youth of the empire must be given more fundamental military knowledge in time of peace. In this way only, they argue, can a great emergency be successfully coped with.

Baron Yamakawa points out that military drill is included in the curriculum of high schools, middle schools, special schools and elementary schools throughout Japan, but that the practice has been rather slighted, both teachers and students attaching to it insufficient importance. The system was adopted as far back as 1856 by the late Alphonse Arimori Mori, the then minister of education, who was the first Japanese minister accredited to the United States.

System Adopted.

President Yamakawa insists that the present course of military drill in the public and private schools shall be more encouraged and that the present course shall include not only military drill but also a general knowledge of military technicalities.

The baron has adopted and is already carrying out his plan at a private school in Kyushu established by Mr. K. Yasukawa, a well-known mine owner of Japan. The school which is devoted to educating the graduates of middle schools in the mining industry, is under the control of President Yamakawa.

The military authorities have accepted the application of the president and professors of the new Imperial University for the training of the students in musketry and a course of study and drill was started a few days ago at the headquarters of the imperial guard regiment in Tokio. Owing to the limited accommodation in the regimental headquarters only forty students have been selected thus far from among many applicants.

They began by learning the handling of small guns from the officers of the regiment, Baron Yamakawa and several professors are also personally taking a hand in the practice. In a speech before the commencement of the training the baron pointed out that he did not advocate "militarism," but he was of the opinion that every Japanese should be equipped with the knowledge of using arms for meeting the requirements of the state and call to duty which were absolutely necessary for the defense and maintenance of the permanent independence of the empire. The new project is receiving warm support from the public.

NO VIOLENCE SHOWN IN PACKERS' STRIKE

(By MORNING JOURNAL SPECIAL LEASED WIRE)

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, Feb. 28.—Quick prevalence in the packing plant strike zone today, notwithstanding a rumor that gained currency that Governor Clarke had been requested to send militia companies to Sioux City. This story was denied at Des Moines, the governor declaring he had received no such request.

The situation as to a settlement remains unchanged, the men refusing to accept an increase offered by officials of the Cudahy and Armour plants late Saturday night.

Prospects of an immediate settlement of the strike were more remote than they have been at any time since the men walked out of the plants of the Cudahy and Armour companies.

Rubber Strike Is Off.

Youngstown, O., Feb. 25.—Employees of the Republic Rubber company, who went on strike yesterday, today returned to work today and the plant is again in full operation. About fifty men in the curing room had walked out.

BEING SQUEAMISH WITHOUT CAUSE

A Habit of Mind Illustrated In the Case of at Least One Very Useful Household Article.

It is a peculiar fact that many people get into the habit of being squeamish about nothing at all. Certain words, for instance, they shall form part and parcel of the conversational medium of exchange. The thing is geographical too, in England, for example, no lady or gentleman would think of using the word "stomach" in an ordinary conversation. This led Mr. J. M. Barrie to write a very amusing play, "Little Mary," in which the aforementioned part of every man and every woman's anatomy was referred to as "little Mary." Now English people do not hesitate to speak about their "little Marys," whereas they would hesitate a long time before using the correct term.

In our own country, quite silly enough, the word "bed" immediately takes on some sinister significance in some minds. And yet if there is any one thing that adds more to man's comfort, that does more to make life worth living it has yet to be discovered. And if people relish at the mere mention of one bed what is to be said when they come in pairs?

To what a ridiculous extent such a prejudice may be carried was illustrated in New York when announcement was made of a play by Salisbury Field and Margaret Mayo, called "Twin Beds." Miss Mayo has always been recognized as a brilliant writer of farce and a woman of refinement and taste, who knows very well where to draw the line between wit and vulgarity. And those who have seen the play say that while it is frankly and funny human it does not draw aside the veil from anything that should be hidden.

The story involves a young man, Harry Hawkins and his exquisite little wife, Blanche. She believes in twin beds, and he is opposed to them. Blanche, as is a way with women, carries her point, and twin beds are established in the Hawkins' marriage. As a result, the little lady finds herself in a mishap with a sentimental opera singer and his wife, who live in the same apartment house and who also rejoice in the possession of sleeping apparatus of the twin family. How other tenants of the same apartment house are drawn into the complications need not be described in detail here. But a lot of highly exhilarating situations are developed before the final explanation frees Blanche from an unjust accusation.

GALVESTON HURRICANE ENTERS INTO DECISION IN A BASEBALL GAME

(By MORNING JOURNAL SPECIAL LEASED WIRE)

Cincinnati, Ohio, Feb. 28.—On the ground that the Galveston baseball club was entitled to "extraordinary consideration," because of last summer's vicious hurricane, the National Baseball commission today refused the application of Tony Smith of the Galveston club to be declared a free agent. With the permission of the national board the Galveston club suspended operations August 25, 1915, with the privilege of reserving its players for the following season. The commission said the most Smith suffered was the temporary inconvenience of being required to wait sixty days for six days' salary due him.

The commission issued the following statement relative to the new rule on players given unconditional release by the Federal league:

"In all cases in which a player has reverted to a national agreement club, as the result of his unconditional release by the Federal league, or any of its clubs, it is the duty of the club to which he returns to promptly contract with such player, transfer him to another club or waive all claim to him in writing."

"Major league clubs are instructed to notify the president of their respective league what action if any, has been taken relative to players which have reverted to them."

"Minor league clubs are required to file similar reports with Secretary Farrell. In all instances in which the interested national agreement club does not use ordinary diligence in signing or disposing of the player, its right to him will not be recognized."
